
vu” syndrome a few decades later. Only, when reported, this variation in time of onset is rarely consistent with the textbook textbook with which we are all familiar: The sense of déjà vu is evoked by the familiarity of the emotional experience, and this is the reason for its sudden appearance in the life of the protagonist. The repetition in the sense of déjà vu is not the only repetition in this story, however. There are also four other repetitions: Clementine's father has a heart attack. She discovers that her father has written in the diary. She finds the diary and reads it. She reads aloud the diary entries. The observations related to déjà vu and the repetition of the four elements of the plot suggest that the characters encounter some form of the repetition compulsion. These repetitions are consistent with the person who has experienced the repetition compulsion, but could be confused with the repetition described in the DSM-IV-TR (American Psychiatric Association, 2000) for obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD) under the section of “Dissociative symptoms.” Such a separation would be useful for creative writers because it would mean that the writer's talent, which consists in transforming one repetition into another, is not circumscribed by the rigid DSM-IV

I'm trying to get digest authentication working with jwt_auth on production, which works well on my local environment. I tried the following but it seems not to work in production: config.action_dispatch.request_options = { sign_in_origin: :new, use_ssl: true, use_http_auth: true, use_2fa: true, http_auth: :digest } per Rails 5.2 has a digest_auth issue now, which you can read about here: I also tried to follow this approach: Which has the user to create a jwt file in "/etc/auth-source/" which seems not to work with production's config.default_selector. So does anyone know how to make digest authentication work on production in the latest version? A: In production.rb add the digest_realm
